FOREWORD

Prominent Thoreau scholar Walter Harding was a member of SUNY Geneseo's English faculty from 1956 through his retirement in 1983. Dr. Harding was a frequent user of Milne Library, visiting regularly to update his ongoing Thoreau bibliography by consulting our print indexes and their high tech successors such as computer-output microform indexes, CD-ROM indexes, and online computer indexes, all of which he mastered to a much greater extent than he felt he had. Dr. Harding was one of my favorite library users, and he posed many challenging reference questions.

During one of Dr. Harding's regular library visits, I mentioned to him that we had his complete works in our College Archives Collection, which includes copies of faculty members' publications. With a twinkle in his eye, he said, "Oh, you don't have my complete works." I admit that I didn't quite believe him. Working on this bibliography has given me a real appreciation of the twinkle and the truth of his remark!

After Dr. Harding's death, his wife Marjorie asked if we would like to make copies of his published articles, chapters, and unpublished typescripts and lectures before they were sent to the Thoreau Institute. Although I suspected our holdings were fairly complete, I gratefully accepted her kind offer. For the next few months, either Mrs. Harding or her son Allen brought boxes of documents to the library and picked them up after I had copied them.

I began the project by creating a database listing articles we already owned; checking this list would keep me from copying things that were already in our collections. I quickly discovered that although we owned nearly all of Walter Harding's published books, our collection of his articles consisted primarily of book reviews and articles published before he joined Geneseo's faculty, leaving major gaps in our holdings. I created another database listing items as I copied them.

The copying project took the better part of a summer, and greatly expanded our collection of brief works written by Walter Harding. My collection-building efforts were again greatly facilitated by Marjorie Harding, who compiled a bibliography of Dr. Harding's Thoreau Society Bulletin articles, most of which were not included in our collection or in the boxes of materials we borrowed. We copied these articles from Milne Library's holdings of the Bulletin and added them to the collection. However, I decided not to copy or list in this bibliography Dr. Harding's "Additions to the Thoreau Bibliography," which appeared in nearly every issue of the Bulletin, or his later recurring feature, "Current Thoreau Literature."

In the continuing effort to complete our holdings, I searched the online MLA International Bibliography by author, identified additional articles by Harding, and tried to fill gaps in our holdings by using interlibrary loan to obtain copies of items we lacked. I then decided to supplement our collection by copying as many articles and other publications as I could find about Dr. Harding, including reviews of his many books. The entire project resulted in our collection growing from two large boxes containing brief works by Dr. Harding to four boxes of his brief works and one box of articles about him. In addition to these boxes, we have more than two shelves holding Dr. Harding's book-length publications and books containing chapters written by Dr. Harding.

In spite of this project, our collection of Walter Harding's works is still incomplete! There were a few cited articles that we were unable to track down through interlibrary loan, and I am sure that we have only a partial collection of translations of Dr. Harding's works. Also, we were unable to locate several cited items in our Virginia Quarterly Review volumes, many of which seem to lack sections that appeared in other volumes; since our citations lacked page numbers, we did not try to obtain the items through interlibrary loan. Thus, Dr. Harding's remark about our collection's incomplete nature is still accurate.

Organizing the materials in our collection and in this bibliography posed many challenges. The biggest problem was the incomplete nature of some of the citations. Most of the items in Walter Harding's personal collection were carefully organized and included full bibliographic citations. A few of the scholarly articles lacked some bibliographic information, and I completed as many citations as possible. The biggest problem was the more than four hundred book reviews, published primarily in the Chicago Tribune and the Richmond News Leader. Most of these lacked page numbers, and a few had incomplete dates. Providing the complete citations for every review would have required many interlibrary loan requests for microfilms of these newspapers and the time-consuming task of searching for hundreds of reviews. I decided that some of the citations in the bibliography would remain incomplete, which certainly goes against a librarian's standards regarding bibliographic precision.

The materials listed in the bibliography are located in four places in Milne Library: the College Archives Collection, a noncirculating collection devoted to the College's history and including faculty publications (call numbers beginning with archive); our special collections room's Walter Harding Collection, formed in the mid-1980s and including material relating to Thoreau and transcendentalism as well as selected works by and about Dr. Harding (call numbers beginning with X); the reference collection (call numbers beginning with ref), and the main circulating collection. All of the College Archives and X collection items listed are noncirculating.

In completing this project, I gratefully acknowledge the following people: Marjorie Harding for her generosity in lending us her husband's publications for copying and for her helpful bibliography of his contributions to the Thoreau Society Bulletin; Allen Harding for transporting boxes of publications to and from the library and for suggestions on the bibliography's organization; and Harriet Sleggs, Milne Library's Interlibrary Loan Manager, for patiently and diligently handling my many interlibrary loan requests.

Thoreau Society Bulletin. 1941 - 1991. (X PS 3053 A23) [Most issues through the early 1990s included Walter Harding's regular feature, "Additions to the Thoreau Bibliography." Many issues also included his "Current Thoreau Literature," which provided in-depth commentary on selected works. These regular contributions are not listed individually in the section of this bibliography listing Walter Harding's articles.]

Book Reviews Written by Walter Harding

Since many of the reviews cover more than one book or are lists of best books, the citations in this section are arranged chronologically rather than following the MLA rule for arranging book reviews.

Nearly all of the citations are based on Walter Harding's handwritten notations or on notes attached to reviews by Richmond News Leader staff. In several cases, the handwritten notes include the month and year with a question mark for the date; these date notations are used in this bibliography.

Nearly all of the book reviews lack page numbers. Because of the large number, providing complete citations was beyond the scope of this project.

All items are in the Brief Works boxes located at archive LD 3840 G48 H37.

It was the most frequently repeated of all my lectures, delivered at points as far apart as the University of Alaska in Fairbanks and an elderhostel in Volcano, Hawaii, and never delivered twice the same. I varied the text, delivering it from brief note cards, to suit the time and the audience, dropping and adding anecdotes as it seemed appropriate. In this version of the text I have tried to include most or all of the tales I have ever used, so it is a much longer version than ever got delivered from the lecture platform."]
